REPORT

1.0 INTRODUCTION

At its meeting of 2014 February 24, Council received a delegation from the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now (ACORN) expressing concerns regarding payday lenders and their impacts on low income individuals. The delegation requested that Council introduce zoning restrictions on the number and location of payday lenders and a moratorium on new licences for payday lending businesses. Council requested that staff prepare a report for the Planning and Development Committee on the issues raised by the delegation. The following report is a response to that request.

2.0 BACKGROUND

This report considers payday loan and similar businesses that offer alternative financial services in a quick service, retail storefront format. These businesses operate outside of the business and regulatory framework of traditional financial institutions, such as banks, credit unions, and trust and loan companies. Studies have shown that individuals with the lowest incomes are most likely to use these services, and concerns have been raised that they contribute to a cycle of indebtedness among the financially vulnerable. The financial services include payday loans, cheque cashing, and installment loans, as outlined below.

2.1 Payday Lenders

Payday lenders are businesses that provide short-term personal loans (known as “payday loans” or “cash advances”) in amounts less than $1,500. In BC, a lending fee of 23% is charged, and loan terms range from 7 to 42 days, often coinciding with a borrower’s payday. Payday lenders may also offer cheque cashing, money transfer and other financial services on a walk-in basis.

2.2 Cheque Cashing

Cheque cashing services provide instant cash for payroll, personal, government and other cheques, money orders, and bank drafts for a nominal flat fee (e.g., $2.99) plus percentage, ranging generally from 1.99% to 6.99% depending on the type of cheque and whether it is postdated. All cheque cashing services in Burnaby are provided by payday loan businesses.

2.3 Installment Loans

Installment loans are marketed as a lower cost, longer term alternative to payday loans. For instance, Easy Financial, which recently opened two storefronts in Burnaby, offers personal loans from $500 to $10,000 with repayment terms from 9 months to 48 months in either weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly installments, with an annual percentage rate of 46.96%. Loan insurance is offered at additional cost, as are loan extensions. Although installment loan services are distinct from payday lenders, given the higher loan amounts, interest rates, and optional fees, their potential impacts raise similar concerns.

Payday loan, cheque cashing, and installment loan services operating in Burnaby are listed in Table 1 below, and a map with their locations is provided in Appendix A.

2.4 Payday Loan Industry

The payday loan industry has operated in Canada for approximately 20 years, having begun its expansion into Canada in the mid 1990's. The Canadian Payday Loan Association (CPLA) represents nearly half of payday loan lenders in Canada, including 815 of 1,771 licensed outlets and online platforms. Five out of six payday lenders in Burnaby belong to the CPLA. As a condition of membership, CPLA members are to abide to a Code of Best Business Practices set by the industry, which is included as Appendix B.

2.5 Provincial and Federal Regulations

Payday loans are regulated in BC under the Payday Loans Regulation of the Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act, which is administered by Consumer Protection BC. This regulation prohibits the following:

- a total charge for loans (including all interest and fees) that exceeds 23% of the principal (for a two-week loan period this equals an approximately 598% annual percentage rate);
- a loan term greater than 62 days;
- loans totaling more than 50% of a borrower's take-home pay;
- loans requiring repayment before the borrower's next payday; and
- issuance of more than one loan to a borrower at the same time.

The regulation also restricts lender access to the borrower's bank and employment records, and requires mandatory registration of all lenders with Consumer Protection BC.

Provincial authority to regulate payday lenders derives from a 2007 May amendment to the federal Criminal Code. This amendment also exempts payday loans from Section 347 of the Criminal Code, which prohibits interest rates greater than 60% per annum. A payday loan is defined as an unsecured "advancement of money in exchange for a post-dated cheque, a pre-authorized debit or a future payment" that is not offered by a federally regulated financial institution as defined by the Bank Act. Under Section 347(2)(a), the loan must be for no more than $1500 and have a term of 62 days or less.

Consumer Protection BC was consulted and it advised that the payday lending industry in BC is a mature sector that exhibits a high level of understanding and compliance with provincial regulations. Consumer Protection BC focuses on education and increasing awareness of both licensees and consumers. Enforcement is complaint driven and voluntary compliance is sought through the investigation process. If this is not achieved, Consumer Protection BC has the authority to escalate enforcement.

Installment loan services are not regulated by the Payday Loans Regulation, although under the BC Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act, interest rates must be disclosed. Federally, installment loan services are not regulated under the Bank Act or the Trust and Loan Companies Act; however, because their services do not meet the definition of payday loans, they are subject to the Criminal Code provisions that limit interest rates to 60% per annum.

2.6 Zoning and Licensing Regulations

Payday loan and similar services are considered a “bank” use under the Burnaby Zoning Bylaw, which is a permitted use in the following zone districts:

- C1, C2, C3, C4, C8, C9 Commercial Districts
- P11 SFU Neighbourhood District

Acceptance of personal property in exchange for loans is considered a “pawn shop” use, and cash for gold services are considered a “second-hand store” use. These services are permitted only in the C3g and the C4g zone districts. None of the payday lenders in Burnaby provide pawn services; however, three Money Mart locations (4607 Hastings Street, 4607 Kingsway, and 7088 Kingsway) advertise cash for gold services. As the subject locations do not have the required C3g or C4g zoning, these activities are not permitted. Staff will further investigate whether cash for gold transactions are being conducted at these locations and, if so, pursue bylaw compliance.

Payday lenders are licensed under the “Financial Services – General” category, which is subject to the standard annual licence fee for businesses occupying 10 ft² or more ($426 for new licences and $125 for renewals).

2.7 Zoning and Licensing Regulations in Other Municipalities

A number of other local governments in the Lower Mainland have sought to restrict or prohibit payday lenders. As outlined in Table 2 below, the City of White Rock prohibits payday loan uses and the City of Maple Ridge recently adopted a similar prohibition. The Corporation of Delta and the Township of Langley both prohibit cheque cashing centres, although payday loans are not specifically included in that use category. The City of Surrey and the City of Coquitlam restrict the density of payday loan and cheque cashing businesses by requiring a 400 m and 1 km distance between locations respectively. The City of Abbotsford prohibits payday loan and cheque cashing businesses in its C7 Historic Downtown zone. The City of Langley permits “money lending and cheque cashing facilities” only in C3 zone shopping centres with enclosed pedestrian mall access.

Other local governments, including the City of Vancouver, City of Richmond, District of West Vancouver, North Vancouver (District and City), City of Port Coquitlam, and the City of Pitt Meadows, are similar to the City of Burnaby in that they do not distinguish payday lenders from other financial institutions. In these municipalities, payday lenders are generally permitted in commercial zones.

2.8 Research on Payday Loan Users

A number of studies and polls have been conducted on payday loan users in Canada. Their results provide insight into the demographics of payday loan users, their motivations, and the impacts of these services on users and the broader community. Results of three of these studies are described below:

2014 Insights West/Vancity Poll

A 2014 poll by Insights West, commissioned by Vancity Savings Credit Union, surveyed 990 respondents in the Lower Mainland and Victoria areas. It found the following:

- Payday loan users (defined as those who have taken out at least one payday loan in the previous 12 months) represent 3% of the adult population in Lower Mainland/Fraser Valley (more than 50,000 individuals).

- Two-thirds of payday loan users take out payday loans a few times per year or more, and one-third do so “about once a month” or more frequently.
- Reasons for using payday loans vary, but most commonly include unexpected expenses (38%); bill payments (37%); debt payments (22%); and a period of unemployment/under-employment (20%).
- Payday loan users report greater financial difficulties:
 - 45% of payday loan users report their general financial situation to be poor, compared to 23% of the general population.
 - 74% of payday loan users had to borrow money from another source for an unexpected expense in the previous 12 months, compared to 25% of the general population.
 - 67% of payday loan users had fallen behind on bill payments in the previous 12 months, compared to 23% of non-payday loan users.
- Most payday loan users (58%) considered the loans to have a positive effect on their finances, primarily because it solved an immediate problem and provided a short term solution. However, one-third of payday loan users considered the loans to have a negative effect on their finances, primarily because of the expense of the required interest and fees.

2005 Stratcom/ACORN Survey

An earlier study by Stratcom, commissioned by ACORN, surveyed 419 individuals in Toronto and Vancouver who had recently taken out or repaid a payday loan. It found the following:

- Payday loan consumers are most often male, older working-age, employed, and born in Canada.
- 45% of respondents reported an annual household income of less than $30,000; 86% of respondents reported an annual household income of less than $60,000. Respondents with the lowest household income (under $30,000) were ten times more likely to report accessing a payday loan in the past year.
- Nearly all respondents had a debit card (88%) and/or a chequing account (85%), but only 58% had a savings account and only 7% had a home mortgage.
- More than 37% of respondents had taken out a payday loan six times or more in the past year, and 19% had taken out more than 10 loans in the same period.
- 52% of respondents had taken out a payday loan in the last year immediately after paying off the last loan. 20% of respondents had done this at least six times.
- 41% of respondents did not know the annual rate of interest charged for payday loans.
- Top reasons cited for using payday loans include: ease and convenience (30%); bad credit rating/outstanding debts (25%); and emergency loans/overdue bill payments (23%).
- Many users of payday loans are people with poor credit records that they believe prevent them from getting adequate services at banks and credit unions, and/or who feel a need for quick cash to cover outstanding bills or debts.

2013 Environics/CPLA Study:

A recent study by Environics, commissioned by the CPLA, interviewed 251 randomly-selected payday loan borrowers in BC. It found the following:

- A majority (61%) of respondents had (in the past or at present) a personal loan from a bank or credit union.
- Most respondents had both debit cards (98%) and chequing accounts (94%), while few had either retail credit cards (16%) or home mortgages (11%).
- 32% of respondents stated that the main reason for using a payday loan was for emergency cash to pay for necessities; 29% stated that it was to help out with an unexpected expense.
- 51% of respondents cited the “quick and easy process” as a secondary reason for using payday loans; 22% stated they had “no other alternative for borrowing,” and 13% cited bad credit.
- 96% reported a positive customer service experience with payday lenders.

2.9 Impacts of Payday Loan Services on Low-Income Individuals/Communities

Studies conducted in the United States on the broader impacts of payday lending have found that it can reduce consumer spending in low income communities, as individuals are stuck in a cycle of debt repayment. This can have a negative impact on the local economy as the individuals in question are restricted in their economic participation. In addition, lenders or creditors with lower interest rates may be impacted, as borrowers prioritize repayment of high interest payday loans over other bill or debt payments.

2.10 Alternatives to Payday Loans

In 2014, Vancity introduced the “Fair and Fast Loan” as a payday loan alternative for members. The loans are similar to payday loans in that they offer quick approvals (within one day) and loan amounts up to $1,500. They differ in that they offer:

- Installment payments (weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly)
- Longer repayment terms (up to 24 months)
- 19% annual interest rate
- Opportunity to establish a credit history and improve credit ratings

There are six Vancity locations in Burnaby, including in the Hastings Street, Lougheed Highway, Kingsway, North Road, Royal Oak commercial corridors and in the Marine Way shopping centre.

Other local credit unions and banks offer short term loan options for members/customers. However, the Vancity program is the only mainstream financial institution that specifically targets users of payday loans.

3.0 DISCUSSION

Critics contend that payday loan and similar services exploit the financial vulnerability of low income individuals by marketing loans that are easy to obtain but difficult to repay. They argue that the high interest rates and short terms of the loans, combined with the limited financial resources of the borrowers, traps individuals in a cycle of indebtedness. Although the 23% limit on fees is within the limits allowed under Provincial regulations, for a two-week loan that is compounded bi-weekly, that rate results in an annual percentage rate (APR) of approximately 598%¹, well beyond the maximum 60% APR provided for under the Federal Criminal Code. Moreover, if further loans are assumed to repay existing loans, the compounding fees can soar even higher.

The payday loan industry, as represented by the CPLA, responds that the industry provides a wide demographic with a needed service that is not offered by traditional financial institutions such as banks and credit unions. They assert that their industry is heavily regulated by Provincial governments as well as by the CPLA Code of Ethics. The payday loan industry also notes that given the short term and small amount of the loan, standard interest rates (such as those offered by banks for larger, longer term loans) would not cover the costs of processing the payday loan. For instance, a two-week $100 dollar loan with a 29% APR would yield only $1.12 in interest.

The results of the polls, outlined in Section 2.8 above, support the contention that the majority of payday loan users are lower income individuals that experience difficulty in meeting their financial obligations. The finding that one third of payday loan users take out loans at least once a month, and two thirds at least several times a year, indicates that many borrowers may indeed enter a cycle of indebtedness that is facilitated by the ease of obtaining a payday loan. This concern is further supported by the finding that payday loan users were three times more likely than the general population to have borrowed money from another source and/or fallen behind on bill payments in the previous 12 months.

On the other hand, borrowers reported a general satisfaction with payday loans, in that they provided an immediate solution to a financial problem. Many respondents, however, felt that the expense of the loans had a negative impact on their finances.

Given the above, it seems reasonable to conclude that payday loans and similar services may meet immediate needs but may have longer term consequences for financially vulnerable individuals. Furthermore, although businesses that derive much of their revenue from payday loan fees may require higher fees to be profitable, institutions such as Vancity have been able to develop alternative short-term loan programs with much more favourable terms for borrowers.

Regarding regulation of payday loan and similar services, as noted in Section 2.7 above, several municipalities in the Lower Mainland have either prohibited or enacted locational restrictions on payday loan and cheque cashing services. Such measures were a response to the concentration of payday loan and cheque cashing outlets in certain areas of the community. Concerns expressed regarding the concentration of these services include:

- the potential for payday loan outlets to replace traditional banking institutions in low income communities (“bank deserts”);
- the potential to incentivize loan accumulation by increased access to several payday loan outlets in one location; and,
- complaints of large numbers of patrons gathering at the outlets on paydays.

In Burnaby, payday loan and similar services in Burnaby appear in nodes of commercial activity, with the majority of locations (6 of 8) located along Kingsway. As shown in Appendix A, payday loan outlets in Burnaby are located in areas with a range of average household income levels. All payday loan locations in Burnaby are in direct proximity to the locations of other financial institutions such as banks and credit unions. In addition, while six of the eight locations are located in the Kingsway corridor, they are distributed in four clusters across an approximately 3.65 km distance, from just west of Willingdon Avenue to Griffiths Drive. As such, no specific high concentration of payday loan services exists in any one area of Burnaby.

Nonetheless, given existing zoning regulations, the potential exists for payday loan and similar services to concentrate in any of the City’s commercial corridors, including Kingsway, Edmonds Street, Lougheed Highway, North Road, or Hastings Street. From a land use perspective, payday lenders occupy small retail storefronts that are intended for a variety of businesses, particularly retail and restaurant uses. Given their small client base (approximately 3% of the population), specialized product, and quick service environments, a concentration of payday loan services can reduce the vibrancy of shopping districts by displacing the small retail and café uses that enliven the streetscape.

For all of the above reasons, staff recommend that Council take a number of actions to address the potential impacts of payday loan services, as outlined in the following sections of this report.

4.0 RECOMMENDED ACTIONS

Although local government does not directly regulate payday loan and similar services, several options exist to address its impacts.

4.1 Zoning Regulations

In order to prevent the proliferation of payday loan services and/or their concentration in any one area of Burnaby, staff recommend that Council adopt a text amendment to the Zoning Bylaw that would permit payday loan and similar services only within the C3g and C4g zoning districts, as is currently required for pawn shops and second hand stores (including cash for gold services). Any new locations would then require rezoning to permit the use. The rezoning process would allow for Council review of the potential impacts of the proposed location, as well as public input through the Public Hearing process. For those existing locations currently offering cash for gold services, rezoning to the C3g or C4g District must be obtained or the cash for gold services must be discontinued. Otherwise, the existing locations can continue to operate as legal nonconforming uses under the provisions of Section 911 of the Local Government Act.

The recommended text amendment would also require that the term “payday loan service” be defined. It is recommended that this definition be extended to also include installment loan services and any loan service by an entity not governed by the federal Bank Act, Trust and Loan Companies Act, or the BC Financial Institutions Act.

On adoption, the proposed bylaw amendments would establish a requirement for Council specific rezoning approval of any new ‘payday loan service’ in Burnaby. As noted, existing legal operations could continue to operate under the provisions of the Local Government Act for legal nonconforming uses. Within Burnaby, these current establishments provide for public access to this service in locations that are within the north-west, south-west, and south-east quadrants of the City. It is noted, that this service is also generally available in the north-east quadrant along North Road in the directly neighbouring City of Coquitlam. While any rezoning application for expansion of this service would be considered on its own merits and in relation to community plans and needs, at this time, it is not expected that approval of further locations for expansion of this service would be warranted or supported, based on the current availability of this service in a range of locations within the City and in adjacent areas.

4.2 Provincial Regulations

As noted in Section 2.3 above, the payday loan industry is regulated by Consumer Protection BC under the Payday Loans Regulation. Changes to this legislation could directly improve the terms upon which loans are offered and reduce the socio-economic impacts of payday loans on borrowers and their communities.

For instance, lowering the maximum fee percentage and interest rates and, perhaps more importantly, requiring payday lenders to offer repayment in installments, rather than one lump sum, would reduce the indebtedness of borrowers and improve their ability to repay loans without further borrowing.

Similarly, extending the prohibition on the issuance of more than one loan in the same week, which currently applies only to the same lender, to include any lender would discourage serial borrowing and reduce the incidence and impacts of perpetual indebtedness.

Staff recommend that Council advocate for the above changes to the Payday Loans Regulation by the following means:

- authorization of staff to prepare a resolution to the 2015 Union of British Columbia Municipalities (UBCM) Convention and the 2016 Federation of Canadian Municipalities (FCM) Annual Conference; and,
- submission of a letter to the Provincial Minister of Justice.

4.3 Consumer Awareness

Opportunities exist to promote greater awareness of the regulations governing payday loans and similar services, the financial impacts of high-interest borrowing, and alternatives that may better meet the needs of residents. For instance, some community organizations (e.g. Burnaby Neighbourhood House, Literacy Now Burnaby, Burnaby Community Services) already engage in financial literacy activities which could be expanded to address payday loan services and related issues. Efforts could also be extended to promote awareness of existing regulations by directing the public to Consumer Protection BC's information website. In its ongoing work with community organizations, staff will encourage initiatives to foster greater consumer awareness of payday loan services and will provide support as feasible.

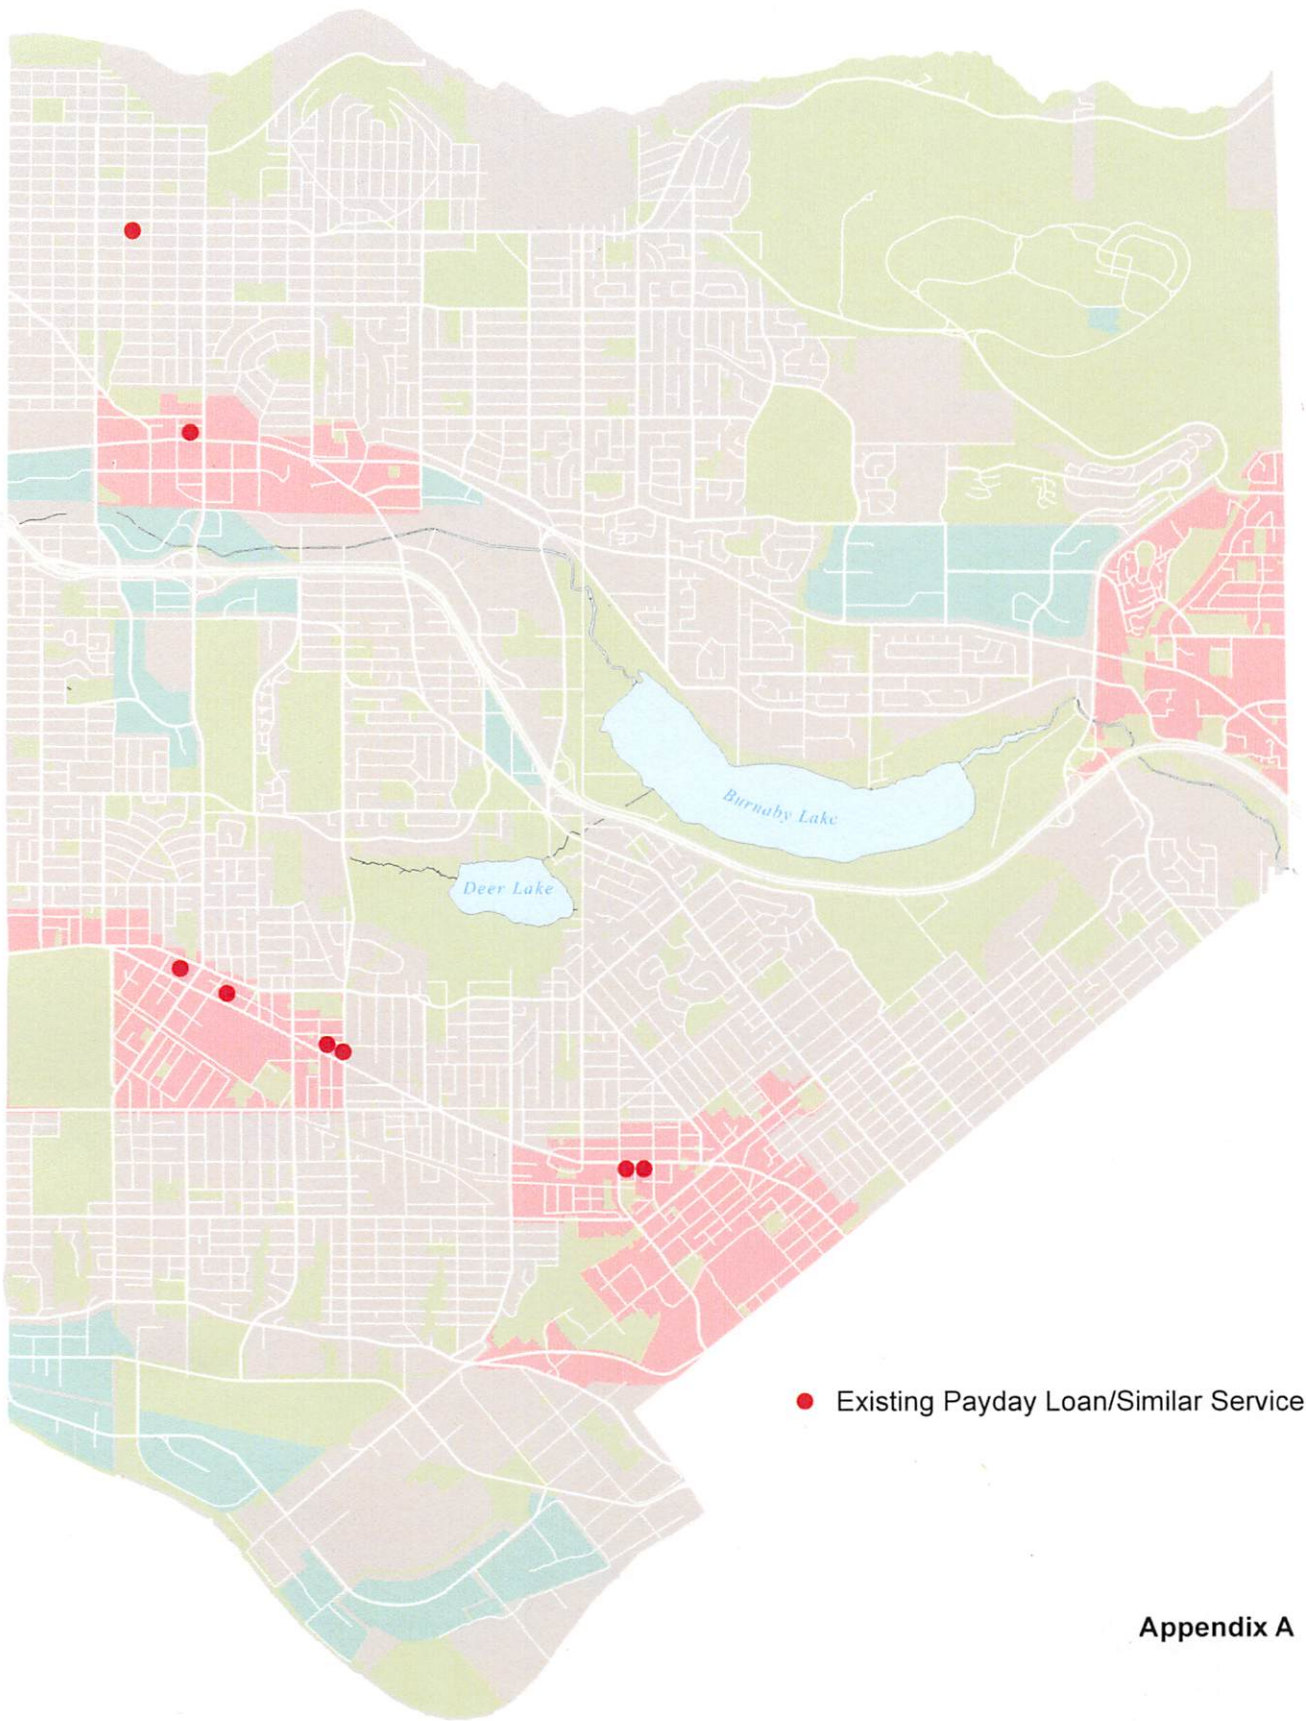

5.0 CONCLUSION

This report presents an overview of the payday loans and similar services, their regulation, potential impacts, and local context, as well as recommendations for addressing concerns regarding the community and socio-economic impacts of these services in Burnaby. It is recommended that Council amend the Burnaby Zoning Bylaw to restrict payday loan and similar services, including cheque cashing and installment loans, to the C3g General Commercial and C4g Service Commercial Districts. It is also recommended that Council advocate, both directly and through a UBCM resolution, for changes to the Provincial Payday Loans Regulation that would lessen the potential for chronic indebtedness among borrowers. It is further recommended that Council support staff's involvement in financial literacy education, in conjunction with local community groups. Lastly, it is recommended that a copy of this report be forwarded to the Social Planning Committee, BC ACORN, the Canadian Payday Loans Association, and to the payday loan and similar service providers operating in Burnaby.
